Center for Health Equity Transformation

"The Center for Health Equity Transformation (CHET), Lexington Kentucky, is located on the original homeland of diverse Native peoples who arrived over 10,000 years ago. The most recent among them were the Shawnee. Today, Kentucky is still home to over 25,000 Native people representing scores of tribal groups. CHET recognizes the injustices Native peoples have endured. Through this statement, we hope to begin the long process of healing."

NIH Virtual event to focus on food insecurity, neighborhood food environment and implementation science

Workshop Date: September 21-23, 2021

Registration

Join the National Institutes of Health for a virtual nutrition health disparities research and implementation workshop on Sept. 21-23, 2021. The goal is to review the state of the science around food insecurity and the neighborhood food environment, identify research gaps and explore innovative research strategies that could inform policies and practices. Experts in these fields will come together for a series of panel discussions that address nutrition health disparities. This online event, which is free and open to the public, features panel discussions, networking opportunities and two poster sessions.

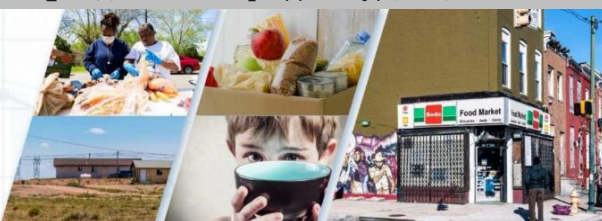

NIH encourages early stage investigators, as well as doctoral and postdoctoral students, working in the areas of food insecurity, neighborhood food environments, and other related nutrition health disparities topics to submit an abstract for a poster. Submit your poster abstract by July 9, 2021 for a chance to present your research and receive an award. Learn more and register by Sept. 7, 2021: <https://bit.ly/3dY3D6H>.

Collaboration Column

"At the moment, I am working on my masters at the University of Kentucky, but I graduated from Centre College with a degree in Sociology/Anthropology. In the past, I had the opportunity of investigating food insecurity in Boyle County, which was an experience that initially pushed me into health equity research and that I found to be interesting."

I would like to continue working on research in relation to health equity."
